MERICY ON SUSPICION

Taking up the subject of detentions of American ships at sea, the United States government states that it cannot acquiesce in undue delays in examining them or the convoying of such ships to British ports for detailed examination. It argues that proof of hostile destination of the cargoes must be in evidence at the time of search, the note adds, is fully recognized, but it cannot be extended to the point of diverting American ships into British ports merely on suspicion.

The United States asserts, moreover, that it views with growing concern the detention of scores of American cargoes consigned from this country to neutral ports, contending that it should be the duty of the belligerent to protect neutral commerce and prevent in nocent merchants from suffering.

One of the most conspicuous complaints cited in the note is against the treatment by Great Britain of American trade in the same treatment to American trade in the violation bill.

It is charged that Great Britain is not according the same treatment to American trade in copper with the Scandinavian countries as to commerce in this product between the United States and Italy under the same conditions of shipment. Even though the Italian government has proclaimed an embargo on the exportation of copper from Italy to belilgerent countries similar to the embargo in force in Norway, Denmark and Sweden, the consignments of copper to Italy from the United States are said to be held up, while those to the Scandinavian countries are not molested.

The American government further records its positions on consignments shipped "to order," or no specific consignments and positions of spipment in the same guns, but with less armor. The speed of a Dreadnought is about twenty-sink to the class proposed would have about twenty-six to twenty-eight knots. The German government in a formal note to the United States and other neutrals then voiced its objections to the British modifications, which similarly the United States opposed.
